Tagung der Computerlinguistik-Studierenden
Student Conference on Computational Linguistics
Last Week of June 2023

ABOUT TACOS

The Tagung der Computerlinguistik-Studierenden (TaCoS) was first organized in 1992 and takes place once a year. It offers students of computational linguistics and adjacent fields a chance to exchange views during talks and workshops.

The conference is hosted by teams of student volunteers at their university. Participants traditionally receive accommodation and breakfast in exchange for a small fee.

At the center of the conference stand talks, workshops, and poster sessions; each given by students. Established academics from the host university are invited as keynote speakers as well. In addition, there is a social program for everyone to connect and network.

PARTICIPANTS

In July 2023, sponsors thus have the special opportunity to be represented at a large student conference in the field of computational linguistics. The TaCoS is attended by up to 150 German and international students each year.

Computational Linguistics alumni are some of the most versatile graduates and can be found everywhere from publishing houses to large tech companies. Their high analytical expectations and early academic independence during their studies make computational linguists a highly interesting target group for sponsors.

Moreover, sponsors allow for an open conference without financial or physical requirements: TaCoS diversity scholarships help students with a social disadvantage or disability, e.g., by financing sign language interpreters.
